A little about me...

I was born and raised in Albania by two wonderful parents who I adore and who adore me. I received a lot of love from them in my childhood and maybe this has helped me to give care and love to the people around me. I came to Australia 7 years ago and I live with my husband here in Oberon. During these 7 years, I have had many goals for my professional and social development and I am proud to have reached, where I am today. I fulfilled the dreams of a whole life here in Australia with will and persistence.

How do you view your role as an educator?

As an educator I view my role as a nurturer and facilitator. I like to teach them new things every day, but I also like it when they teach me new things. They are wonderful in every sense of the word.

What do you believe about how young children learn?

Young children learn from examples and by doing things. They need to feel and touch what they do. As they grow older, they begin to develop further and allow to focus on seeing and understanding things with their mind. They learn by playing, from different activities inside or outside, from experiments, from conversations etc.

What do you hope young children will become?

I hope that they will become capable and independent individuals that learn to love and help each other. I hope they will become the talented and educated leaders of tomorrow.

How do you support each child to thrive?

First of all, I respect and give kindness to every child. I believe these are the main basis for the child to be emotionally healthy. Secondly by answering each of their questions, with an open mind, with the aim of making the child think more broadly and develop their thinking. Thirdly by planning engaging activities and experiences within the indoor and outdoor environment for children to explore.
